Oxford School District to End

The Tuscarawas county board of education has ordered formal dissolution of the Oxford township school district and all territory of the south-western Tuscarawas county township has been attached to the Newcomerstown Exempted Village school district.

The board's action followed several years of maneuvering which included the same move of the county board on a previous occasion. The transfer was later rescinded when a remonstrance petition with a majority of voters in the district was filed with the board.

The state board of education then ordered the county board to transfer the contingent section of the district in which residents favored the transfer to Newcomerstown. Unfortunately the splitting of the district resulted in a revaluation so low that the Oxford local board was unable to operate its only school, Stacker school.

LAST YEAR all pupils were assigned to the Newcomerstown schools and the local board paid tuition on its pupils. In November 1954, the electors of the district turned down a renewal of a six-mill operating levy which left the school board with less than $4,000 annual income.

The latest board action will again be voted on in November, but approval of the move is expected to be given by the voters. Should voters disapprove there will still be an Oxford local school district and a school board but it will not have enough money to operate and pupils will still be sent to Newcomerstown.

Unfortunately the move comes at a bad time for Newcomerstown which lost one of its grade schools in the March tornado.

County Supt W E Laws said the territory which had previously been attached to the Newcomerstown school district contained more than half of the tax valuation of the township school district.

Oxford township surrounds Newcomerstown and includes Post Boy and Houth and all the territory south and east of Newcomerstown to the county line.
